My Story

Ifit all the characteristics of the middle child. Always thought my siblings got more than me or were better at just about everything. That's just how my brain functions. It was all me, all in my head, and I'm almost certain that is exactly where it all began. The "stinking thinking".

As far back as I can remember, there was booze and beer present in our home. My parents always drank. I thought that was normal. I don't recall ever seeing mom and dad drunk or maybe they were and I was too naive to notice. There I go again, living in "Amanda-land" where everything is perfect, including me. Back to reality, I have a twin brother and older sister. My older sister, my best friend, is the first person I ever took a drink with, 12 years old I believe, 3 Doors Down concert. It was also the first time I tried smoking weed. Fast forward a couple years and bring high school into the picture. I excelled in athletics, my whole family did. We were jocks, everyone liked us, we went to all the parties, ya know, did what jocks do.

I can't say I remember my first drunk but I do remember that experiencing what being drunk was, I couldn't get enough. All through high school we drank, everyone I knew drank or smoked or experimented with other drugs. I always said I wouldn't get involved in drugs, I have never been so wrong in my entire life. I did well in school, had lots of friends, one boyfriend throughout all of high school, became captain of softball as a junior. Summer of senior year, I got picked up at a party for underage drinking. I lost that captain position quicker than I earned it. First big loss which lead to many. That was when I first encountered Alcoholics Anonymous.

Once I lost my leadership role with softball, that's when the rebellious stage started. I moved out before I graduated because I was defiant and disrespectful. I wanted to be on my own so I worked two jobs the week after graduation. I thought I was doing well. I had an apartment with my boyfriend, partying every night, working every day. I was wrong, once again. Summer ended and so did my seasonal job that paid really well. I got arrested for fighting in my hometown, not good. I started bartending and staying out all night, sometimes not returning home for days. I picked up using oxycontin and smoking crack. I no longer needed a physical companion, I found everything I ever needed with drugs and alcohol.

Summer after my 20th, I decided I didn't need a job. I worked hard enough for my money and I should be able to party all summer long and do whatever I want to! That fall, I got picked up for possession of marijuana and pills. Shortly after that, I rolled my truck. I chased the high and loved the escape drugs brought me. Throughout those short lived years, I lost jobs, friends, love interests, cars, money and respect for myself.

I aspired to be a hair stylist, figured it was time to embark on that dream. I was accepted in beauty school, not only by the admissions director, but by colleagues and new friends to drink and drug with! That went well for over a year. I maintained my regimen of drinking nightly, going to school Monday-Friday and continuing my selfishness. I graduated top of my class, but was heading nowhere fast. I soon landed a job at the NH State Liquor Commission, working in one of their retail stores. Working with liquor and having it as a main part of my life, my drinking grew heavily into a major problem. That problem got me a D.U.I. Which took two years of my life, my privilege to operate a vehicle and I lost hope.

One night working at the liquor store, I was reintroduced to a gentleman. We exchanged numbers and just as rapidly as my drinking spiraled out of control, so did our relationship. Next thing I knew we were moving in together. That escalated quickly! We spent just over three years together officially. Three years of drug and alcohol fused love. We were destined to get married and spend the rest of our messed up lives together. We had moved at least a dozen times, sold and ruined numerous vehicles, rifled through friends, became homeless, lost all hope and eventually each other. We tried rehab, counseling and working things out ourselves, but nothing worked. In the end, I lost my mental sanity and went crazy. There's only so much stress one can endure. One final arrest and we had chosen to go separate ways.

My last failed attempt at doing things my way was just as unsuccessful as the other attempts. I drank all day every day and even starting using heroin on a daily basis. All these unfortunate events which I can hardly recall is not exactly how I pictured my life or anywhere to close the life I imagined. I drank heavily and used so often, I became very ill and landed in the E.R. I had pancreatitis and acute liver damage. I spent four lonely days in the hospital. I had to make a choice to leave that life behind and start a new life. That is exactly what I did. I gave up alcohol, drugs and smoking cigarettes. I have since gained so much more than I could have imagined. I have my health, a job that pays well, and a beautiful family. I have gained back respect and trust from those who mean the most to me. I thank my higher power daily and I try not to take anything for granted. This is truly a wonderful life, being sober and clean.

—Amanda B.
